

POLE POSITION RACEWAY

Have you ever thought about how much fun it would be to race against James Stewart? You know, go the same speed as the multi-time champ, and maybe, just maybe, have a shot at passing the young superstar? Odds are you have dreamed about it, but instantly realized that it's probably not going to happen on a Motocross or Supercross track.

Millsaps, Kurt Caselli, Grant Langston, Nathan Ramsey, and Ricky Johnson are just a few that come to mind. Heck we even had a bunch of Team Green riders show up one day for a little race action with Final Lap magazine. We had 12 mini riders spend about three hours here one morning, and a lot of them even said it taught them a lot about momentum and cornering."

"I'm really surprised at how fast the karts are," said James Stewart. "I wasn't sure about the whole electric thing, but they are the fastest karts I've ever driven at any indoor track. Plus, the whole thing is just cool. There's really a lot of interesting stuff to look at."

Although Williams and Faught created the company, they are not the only ones involved. They approached a bunch of their friends to help out with the project, and that's what really gave Pole Position Raceway its elite status."

"Jeremy McGrath, Mike Metzger, Steve Hatch, Greg Albertyn, Trevor Vines, Dick Burluson, Jeff Fox (Parts Unlimited), Eric Phipps (Works Connection) and Paul Thede (Race Tech) are all involved with our project," added Williams. "They have helped us make this a real racing experience."

Most of the races are done on the 1/4-mile long European-style road against the clock. Pole Position Raceway uses electronic transponders just like the AMA uses for the Motocross and Supercross, to record everyone's lap times. The times are then put on a 10' x 12' projection screen television for everyone to see. And because all of the top riders have driven the high-performance electric karts, you can compare your times to the world's fastest motorcycle and car racers. ■

But there is a place where you do have a shot of going head-to-head with the world's fastest riders. It's called Pole Position Raceway and it is located deep in the heart of motocross country in Corona, California. The indoor karting center opened this past September and has already become the hangout of hangouts for our sport. Everyone from Stewart to NASCAR's Kyle Busch have spun laps inside the 53,000 square-foot state-of-the-art facility. So what's the big draw?

"There's actually a lot of reasons why people visit Pole Position Raceway," says co-founder and President Ken Faught. "Some come to look at our mini motocross museum, others come to just have fun in our performance race karts, and others come here for a chance of seeing a famous racer or two."

"It seems like everyone has been here," says Jason Williams, a former AMA 500cc National competitor and Faught's primary partner in the project. "Ricky Carmichael, Chad Reed, Nate Adams, Malcolm Smith, Ernesto Fonseca, Davi
